THE INSIDERS GUIDE FOR GUN OWNERS

Issue 149

May, 2007

Dear Subscriber,

The Virginia Tech shooting by deranged 23-year-old senior Seung-Hui Cho ended with 32 students dead before Cho turned his gun on himself.

But it started a torrent of demands for more gun control, predictably from New York Democrat Rep. CAROLYN McCARTHY and her H.R. 1859, the Anti-Large Capacity Ammunition Feeding Device Act of 2007, which would reinstate parts of the expired "Assault Weapons Ban" of 1994 concerned with firearms having large capacity magazines.

McCARTHY introduced the bill because forensic experts at the Cho crime scene found about 175 cartridge casings around the classrooms and over 100 bullet wounds on victims.

She assumed Cho had used large capacity magazines in his Glock 19 and Walther P22 handguns.

Toledo Blade columnist JACK KELLY ripped ABC's Brian Ross, "who reported, falsely, that Cho used large-capacity magazines for his two handguns (he did not), and that these had been banned by a 1994 federal gun control law the Bush Administration let expire (they were not)."

Senate Majority Whip DICK DURBIN (D-IL) gave McCARTHY's bill no chance. "I don't believe that the Bush White House is going to sign any legislation that is going to change the gun laws in any measurable way."

The issue quickly turned to the Virginia Tech shooter's ability to buy handguns despite a special justice's ruling that he was a danger to himself and others.

Cho slipped through the cracks of the FBI's National Instant Criminal Background Check System (NICS), which forbids guns sales to the mentally ill, because the special justice ordered only outpatient treatment and did not commit Cho to a psychiatric hospital. Nobody checked to see if Cho got treatment.

Only those who have been actually committed to a mental institution are required to be entered into the NICS database.

McCARTHY has tried to change that with H.R. 297, the NICS Improvement Act of 2007, which would require states to notify the U.S. Attorney General if "a person has been adjudicated as mentally defective or committed to a mental institution."

This is the fourth time she has introduced the bill since 2002. It passed the House twice, but died in the Senate.

The "adjudicated as mentally defective" clause has been the sticking point.

Gun owners see it as a trap that could deny gun rights to innocent citizens without institutionalization if malicious people accused someone they disliked of mental illness and obtained a judge's ruling based on false testimony.

Rep. JOHN DINGELL (D-MI), a gun rights advocate, co-sponsored McCARTHY's bill. He was reported by Newsday as being in quiet talks with the National Rifle Association to see if they will support or oppose the bill.

House Speaker Nancy Pelosi (D-CA) was scheduled to meet with DINGELL and McCARTHY at press time, but even if she decides to go ahead, the House Judiciary Committee is likely to be reluctant to risk control of Congress and the 2008 presidential election on a hot-button issue many believe cost them previous elections. Gun rights are a powerful political force.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA ASKS APPEALS COURT TO OVERTURN GUN RIGHTS RULING

The District of Columbia's Democrat Mayor Adrian Fenty has appeared in court along with the district's attorney general and police chief to ask the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit to strike down a previous appeals court ruling that its ban on handguns is unconstitutional.

In March, in a 2-1 ruling, a panel of the circuit court's judges said the ban contravenes the Second Amendment right to keep and bear arms, which it also said was an individual right.

The District's officials are asking for the full court to hear their case en banc, meaning that all 11 judges of the circuit's appeals court will rule, rather than a basic 3-judge panel like the one that had already ruled.

The District could have appealed directly to the U.S. Supreme Court, where the case could still end up if the court en banc rules to uphold the panel's ruling.

The appeals court will decide later in the spring whether to hear the case. If it agrees to hear it, oral arguments won't likely start until fall.

OHIO APPEALS COURT RULES "NO GUNS" SIGN IN PARK ILLEGAL

The Court of Appeals of Ohio's Sixth District has reversed its earlier ruling approving the City of Clyde's ordinances restricting the places in which a person may carry a concealed weapon, city parks in particular.

The appeal, which overturned a ruling by the Sandusky County Court of Common Pleas, was brought for Ohioans for Concealed Carry, Inc. by attorneys Dan Ellis and Ken Hansen.

The reversal was made possible by the state legislature's passage of HB 347, a concealed carry law that preempted local ordinances. The bill was vetoed by former Governor Bob Taft, but the legislature overrode his veto. The appeal was pending when HB 347 passed and became law.

The court remanded the case to the trial court to enter judgment in favor of the appellants, and ordered the City of Clyde to pay for the costs of the appeal.

FEDERAL JUDGE DISMISSES CHALLENGE TO CALIFORNIA COUNTY'S GUN BAN

U.S. District Judge Martin J. Jenkins has dismissed a lawsuit brought by Russell and Sallie Nordyke, two gun show promoters, that challenged an Alameda County ordinance that bans possession of guns on county property, including its fairgrounds in Pleasanton. Alameda County is in California's Bay Area.

The Nordykes' gun shows were drawing up to 4,000 people at the fairgrounds when the Alameda County Board of Supervisors approved the ordinance in 1999 after an incident at the county fair where 8 people were shot.

Judge Jenkins ruled that the ordinance is part of a legitimate government interest, which in this case is promoting public safety.

NEW YORK COURT RULES MAN WRONGLY CHARGED FOR ILLEGAL HANDGUN

The New York Court of Appeals, the state's highest court, has ruled that William Harvish, formerly of rural Schoharie County, shouldn't have been charged after turning in an unlicensed .44-caliber Magnum handgun after being ordered to surrender all his guns in a domestic violence case.

Police filed an illegal weapons charge against him when he turned in several guns, all legal except the Magnum. The high court said it placed him in an "impossible dilemma" that violated his Fifth Amendment right against incriminating himself in a crime.

BLOOMBERG SPENT $85 MILLION ON HIS LAST CAMPAIGN - NOW IT'S ANTI-GUN ADS

How much will anti-gun billionaire, New York City Mayor Michael Bloomberg spend to take your guns away from you?

"In terms of how much money to spend I don't know," he told WCBS-TV reporter Marcia Kramer about his new TV ad campaign to stop Congress from protecting FBI gun trace information from predatory mayors who want to use the data for lawsuits against the firearms industry, not for catching criminals.

Bloomberg said he would spend whatever it takes of his own funds to repeal the Tiahrt Amendment, a measure that prevents the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives from sharing gun data with cities or local police if it could jeopardize active federal investigations, but allows access to gun trace data if it relates to a specific city or local criminal investigation or prosecution.

BLOOMBERG WATCH

The amendment was first passed in 2003 by Rep. Todd Tiahrt (R-KS) and then attached to a major spending bill each year.

Bloomberg's Mayors Against Illegal Guns now has 214 mayors signed up to back the TV campaign against the Tiahrt Amendment, which ran in New York, Washington, and the districts of pro-gun Members of Congress.

WICHITA TV STATIONS WON'T RUN BLOOMBERG ADS - THEY CAN'T BE VERIFIED

Bloomberg's TV ads are short on facts, long on vague, emotional rhetoric: "We are fighting criminals and illegal guns. Why is Congress fighting us?" asks Scott Knight, police chief of Chaska, Minnesota, in one of Bloomberg's ads.

Bloomberg's ads make it sound like local police can't get gun trace data in criminal investigations. They can and do, routinely.

The ads don't make clear that the gun trace data mayors want is a list of which gun shops sold the bulk of guns later found in crimes (as if the gun dealers were deliberately aiding criminals) so they can bring civil lawsuits against gun shops.

That's what Bloomberg did the last time he got trace data. He hired private investigators - without the knowledge of either the BATFE or his own police department - to go out of state and stage phony "sting operations" and then sued small gun shops that couldn't afford lawyers fees to defend themselves.

Two TV stations in Wichita declined to air Bloomberg's ads, saying they could not verify the claims.

VIRGINIA TECH CASE PROVES BLOOMBERG LIES ABOUT GUN TRACE DATA ACCESS

It took less than 24 hours for authorities to trace two handguns used by Virginia Tech gunman Seung Hui Cho, proving that New York Mayor Michael Bloomberg is lying when he claims that legitimate law enforcement access to trace data is being blocked by federal law.

The Citizens Committee for the Right to Keep and Bear Arms (CCRKBA) issued a news release with the facts:

Local police, working with the BATFE, were able to trace both handguns quickly, even though Cho apparently filed off the serial numbers from both guns. That could only happen if police currently can access BATFE trace capabilities. Bloomberg's hysteria-driven effort to undo the federal law that now protects that sensitive data from politically-motivated demagogues like himself is a flimsy sham.

Bloomberg's sole interest in broadening access to that data is so that he and other anti-gun politicians can use it to mount more bogus gun shop stings and bully firearms retailers with harassment lawsuits.

The federal statute was adopted specifically to protect the privacy of American gun owners from politicians like Bloomberg, and to prevent the kind of grandstanding he launched last year with his vigilante operation against gun shops in five states.

It's clear Bloomberg will resort to anything to take your guns.

ARIZONA HOUSE REVISITS BILL TO MAKE SELF-DEFENSE LAW RETROACTIVE

Gov. Janet Napolitano vetoed a bill that would have made Arizona's 2006 self-defense law apply retroactively because it would apply to too many cases. The Arizona House of Representatives has reworked the bill to apply only to cases pending in trial court when the law took effect on April 24, 2006. The new version passed the House on a 32-23 vote only six days after failing 31-27. The four Republicans and one Democrat who changed their votes didn't explain why.

IN THE STATES

The Legislature also passed and sent to Gov. Napolitano a bill reducing the failure to produce a paper permit while carry a concealed weapon from a Class 2 misdemeanor with 4 months jail time and a $750 fine to a petty offense with no jail time and a $300 fine. The governor is expected to sign it.

COLORADO CONCEALED WEAPON DATABASE RENEWAL NARROWLY ADVANCES

Colorado's database of the state's concealed weapons permit holders barely survived a renewal effort by one vote in the Senate after freshman Sen. Gail Schwartz, a Western Slope Democrat, switched her vote to support it. The database has been a sore spot with gun owners who believe it could be used as a gun registration tool.

The database was set to expire July 1, but the measure, House Bill 1174, would extend it for another four years and require the state auditor to find whether the data is helping law enforcement and public safety. Police support the renewal. Schwartz said it was a difficult vote. "I am a proponent for people's Second Amendment rights, but the support by law enforcement is an important consideration."

CONNECTICUT BILL SUPPOSEDLY TARGETS ILLEGAL GUN SALES

A bill requiring gun owners to report a lost or stolen gun within 72 hours of the time they discover it missing or face criminal charges has passed the Connecticut General Assembly's judiciary committee by 36-3. A similar bill passed the Senate last year but died in the House after aggressive lobbying by gun owners. Proponents claim this year's bill is a "compromise to respect the rights of legitimate gun owners" but all it really did was lower the fine to $90 for a first offense and let owners keep their gun permit. Second offense gets 10 years in prison. The bill also creates a new crime, "trafficking in firearms," punishing anyone who buys a gun and later sells it to a disqualified owner or anyone who commits a crime with it - 5 to 10 years in prison.

FLORIDA GUN RIGHTS BILL PASSES ANOTHER COMMITTEE

The Senate Judiciary Committee has voted 8-3 in favor of a bill that would make it illegal for businesses to keep employees from bringing guns to work and storing them in their vehicles. National Rifle Association lobbyist Marion Hammer said, "It's an issue whose time has come. People are sick and tired of being dictated to because they decide to become a customer or an employee." But the Senate progress may not mean much. The bill has yet to be taken up by the House, and opponents are planning a TV campaign to defeat it. The Florida Chamber of Commerce and Florida Retail Federation have joined to create "Floridians Against Workplace Violence," saying that the right to bear arms does not trump the right to dictate policy over private property. An unfortunate clash of two constitutional rights.

KANSAS LEGISLATURE OVERRIDES GOVERNOR'S CONCEALED CARRY VETO

Gov. Kathleen Sebelius' veto of a preemption bill forbidding local governments to exceed state restrictions on concealed carry was overridden by the House on the last Monday of April on a 96-26 vote - 14 more than the two-thirds majority required. For a few days it was a question whether the Senate would follow suit. The Senate postponed a vote on that Thursday because a senator who supported the override was absent. Then the next day, Friday, the chamber passed the override by a 30-10 vote, more than the two-thirds required. The bill became law upon the final override vote. It will prevent local anti-gun rules from becoming a patchwork of traps for traveling concealed carry permit holders.

ANTI-GUN MASSACHUSETTS SENATOR FILES DATABASE BILL

Senator Jarrett Barrios has filed legislation to create a central database tracking guns bought and sold on the secondary market and make it a crime to not report a lost or stolen gun. The bill also allows judges to consider illegal gun possession when setting bail, and bans the purchase of more than one gun a month.

IN THE STATES

The language Barrios and his supporters use is a prime example of "framing," a technique devised by linguistics professors to make ideas sound good. Buying more than one gun a month is "bulk purchasing," which makes it sound like a gun buyer is walking out of a gun shop with a crate of firearms. Any decent citizen who fails to report a lost or stolen gun is a "trafficker," which makes them sound like a gun smuggler. The gun control crowd is getting sophisticated advice from somewhere.

MICHIGAN LAWMAKERS PROPOSE ENDING IN-PERSON GUN CHECKS

Rep. Paul Opsommer (R-DeWitt) and four co-sponsors have introduced legislation to eliminate in-person handgun inspections at county sheriffs' offices and mandate that gun dealers send the registration information to police. In person registration is sometimes impossible because some sheriffs' offices only perform inspections for a limited time each day, said co-sponsor Joel Sheltroun (D-West Branch). Also, officers in charge of inspection are often unavailable, said co-sponsor Alan Cropsey (R-De Witt). "It will save people some time and it will save police some time. Let's get into the 21st century."

MISSOURI HOUSE OKAYS BILL TO END GUN PERMITS

The Missouri House of Representatives has agreed to get rid of a state law requiring people to obtain permits from their local sheriff before they can get a handgun. The state process simply duplicates the checks already required by federal law, so it's not a matter of loosening regulations. The bill, sponsored by Rep. Brian Munzinger (R-Williamstown), won initial approval on a voice vote with little discussion. It needs a second vote to move to the Senate. This permit law is separate from the requirements gun owners must meet to obtain a permit to carry a concealed weapon.

PENNSYLVANIA HAS GUN REGISTRY AND ANTI-REGISTRY BILLS

House Bill 760, the Firearms Registration Act, was introduced into the Pennsylvania House of Representatives by Rep. Angel Cruz (D-Philadelphia) and created an instant firestorm among gun owners. This bill would require gun owners to register their firearms every year and pay a $10 annual fee per gun, would allow police to confiscate guns from owners who failed to pass the registration process, and make it a summary offense for failing to comply with the registration rules. Cruz said it is needed to fight an increase in urban murders. Philadelphia had 400 homicides last year and 100 by the end of March this year.

In angry response, Rep. Daryl Metcalfe (R-Cranberry) introduced two pro-gun bills, the first to prohibit Pennsylvania law enforcement agencies from maintaining registries or databases of legal firearm purchases; the second would provide emergency firearm licenses for "potential victims of domestic abuse."

Rep. Jeffrey P. Pyle (R-Ford City) said Cruz' Registration Act is just plain dead. "I doubt it will even get out of committee." Cruz started with 8 co-sponsors, but 5 withdrew. But it certainly is ruffling a lot of feathers.

TENNESSEE MOVES PRO-GUN BILLS

In a surprise move, the Tennessee House Judiciary Committee's Criminal Practice Subcommittee voted to repeal a state law that forbids the carrying of handguns on property and buildings owned by state, county and city governments, including parks and playgrounds.

A bill sponsored by Rep. Randy Rinks (D-Savannah) is moving in the House to allow use of deadly force for self defense in more situations. Immunity from civil liability would be expanded to vehicles and dwellings, not just one's own home.

FORMER U.N. OFFICIAL HOPES VIRGINIA TECH SHOOTINGS BRING GLOBAL GUN CONTROL

Mary Robinson, U.N. High Commissioner for Human Rights from 1997 to 2002, said she hopes Seung-Hui Cho's campus murder-suicide generates support for a U.N. treaty to control the international small arms trade. She noted that the U.S. was the only country to oppose a UN General Assembly resolution to create the first international regulation for trade in small arms and light weapons. She did not mention that the U.S. is also the only country with a bill of rights guaranteeing citizen ownership of firearms.

JAPAN TIGHTENS GUN CONTROL

Japan has adopted stricter gun control guidelines following a spate of gangster shootings that shook this nation known for its crime-free streets. The new guidelines for law enforcement agencies will require foreign aircraft and ships to report more detailed information on their cargo, passengers and crew to Japanese customs authorities, who will inspect suspicious cargo. The guns used by criminals in Japan are mostly foreign, and the guidelines are supposed to prevent an influx of guns from abroad.

MOST SWISS WANT TO BAN ARMY GUNS FROM HOMES

A survey by the Isopublic research institute found that 65.6 percent of citizens (among women it was 75 percent) would vote to ban army weapons from homes, ending a long-standing tradition of the country's militia army. Under Swiss law all able-bodied men are issued with a rifle and 50 rounds of ammunition which they can keep after completing their compulsory military service. An estimated 1.6 million firearms are in private ownership in Switzerland and about 300 people are killed every year by standard issue weapons. Parliament is divided on the issue, a Senate committee recommending a ban on ammunition only, but the House of Representatives threw out a plan to tighten the gun law. Swiss president Micheline Calmy-Rey is opposed to storing army firearms at home, but Christophe Keckels, head of Swiss army forces said the militia army needs to be able to mobilize rapidly, and that "A soldier without his weapon is not a soldier."

BRITS BAN SAMURAI SWORDS

The United Kingdom's Home Office has announced that the sale of imitation samurai swords will be banned by the end of the year. Importing or renting the weapon could also be made illegal following a string of samurai sword attacks in recent years. Breaching the ban would result in up to six months in jail and a £5,000 fine. Carrying a samurai sword in a public place already gets a maximum jail sentence of four years. There have been at least 80 serious crimes with the swords in England and Wales over the last four years. They were being used by criminal gangs as the preferred weapon of choice after guns. Knife control comes to the British. Forks next?

QUEBEC GOVERNMENT WANTS GUN CONTROL LAWS THIS SPRING

Quebec Premier Jean Charest's minority government hopes to pass a new gun control law this month. Public Security Minister Jacques Dupuis said the bill aims to limit the use of restricted firearms, such as the semi-automatic weapon used by Kimveer Gill in a shooting at Dawson College in Montreal last fall that left one dead and 20 others wounded. Charest condemned the federal Conservatives plans to scrap Canada's gun registry.

REPUBLIC OF IRELAND TO TRY CASTLE DOCTRINE LAW

Ireland's Minister for Justice, Equality and Law Reform Michael McDowell has announced the government's approval to a proposal for a new bill to remove the requirement on occupiers to retreat in the face of a criminal trespasser before using force. McDowell is also Tanaiste, Gaelic for Deputy Prime Minister, and is actively promoting the bill, which also makes provision for the extent of justifiable force that may be used, and clear definitions of its terms.

GUN NEWS TICKER - QUICK TAKES ON THE NEWS

●Butler County, Ohio: Sheriff Richard K. Jones is calling on the Ohio Legislature to mandate armed personnel in every Ohio school. This includes not only college campuses, but also grade schools, private schools, and parochial schools. Jones sent letters to Ohio Gov. Ted Strickland and State Rep. Courtney Combs calling for mandatory armed personnel in all public and private Ohio schools. Jones said his plan is intended to prevent a school shooting such as the one at Virginia Tech. Jones suggested assigning law enforcement officers to each school or training select school officials to handle weapons and enforce laws, and commissioning those officials as Ohio Peace Officers. Jones admitted his plan would likely be expensive and would not prevent school shootings, but he said armed personnel would limit the number of casualties in such an event.

●Washington, D.C.: Authorities have dropped charges against Phillip Thompson, 45, senior aide to Senator Jim Webb (D-Virginia) who carried a loaded pistol into the U.S. Capitol complex. U.S. Attorney Jeff Taylor, top prosecutor in the District of Columbia, said "we do not believe the essential elements of the crime of carrying a pistol without a license can be proved beyond a reasonable doubt." Thompson was arrested after Capitol Police spotted the loaded pistol and two loaded magazines in a briefcase being scanned by an X-ray machine at the entrance of the Russell Senate office building. He said the gun belonged to Senator Webb, but Webb would not say if it was his. He only told reporters Thompson had carried the gun into the building "completely inadvertently."

●Bellevue, Washington: The Second Amendment Foundation praised a new report by criminologists Prof. Don Kates of the United States and Prof. Gary Mauser of Canada that shows the rate of firearms ownership is irrelevant to the homicide and violent crime rate. The report is in the current issue of the Harvard Journal of Law and Public Policy and is titled, "Would Banning Firearms Reduce Murder and Suicide? A Review of International Evidence." They conclude that "nations with very stringent anti-gun laws generally have substantially higher murder rates than those which allow guns."

●Boston: Prof. Nicholas Winset was fired from the Catholic liberal arts school, Emmanuel College, for re-enacting the Virginia Tech massacre in his classroom in order to show that deranged gunman Seung-Hui Cho could have been stopped if another student had been carrying a gun. The pro-gun viewpoint offended students and resulted in his immediate firing, which was done with a one-page letter delivered by courier. The letter ordered him "not to enter the College campus at any time for any reason." Emmanuel College spokeswoman Molly Honan would not reveal why they fired Winset. Scholarly freedom of inquiry seems to apply only to left-wing anti-gun professors.

●Kennesaw, Georgia: In March 1982, 25 years ago, the small town of Kennesaw responded to a handgun ban in Morton Grove, Illinois, and unanimously passed an ordinance requiring each head of household to own and maintain a gun. Since then, despite dire predictions of "Wild West" showdowns, increased violence and accidents, not a single resident has been involved in a fatal shooting, as a victim, attacker or defender. Their 2005 per capita crime rate was lower than in 1981. Morton Grove's crime rate increased by 15.7 percent.

●Madison, North Carolina: Remington Arms Co., the gunmaker that equipped U.S. soldiers for 150 years, has been acquired by New York-based private-equity firm Cerberus Capital Management LP for $118 million. The company produced its first profit in three years in 2006 after struggling with rising materials costs. Remington's management, led by Chief Executive Officer Thomas Milner, will remain in place, company spokesman Al Russo said. Remington is the country's largest and oldest maker of rifles and shotguns. Remington was founded in 1816 by Eliphalet Remington II, who built his first flintlock in Ilion Gulch, New York.

DON'T MESS WITH MISS AMERICA, EVEN IF SHE IS 82

With a name like Venus, you know she started as a showgirl (it was at the Beverly Hills Supper Club).

And if you know your beauty pageant history, you know Venus Ramey became the first redheaded Miss America in 1944 (representing the District of Columbia, where she was working for the war effort).

She had performed in vaudeville, entered beauty contests, and her picture even adorned a B-17 bomber that flew 68 missions over Germany in World War II.

But you're just not ready for this 82-year-old lady leaning on a walking stick who found the thieves that had been stealing old machine parts to sell for scrap from a building on her farm in Waynesburg, Kentucky, about 140 miles south of Cincinnati.

Venus Ramey had been feeding her horses one day when her dog led her to the storage building near the road.

There she confronted a man who was brazenly loading his truck with her century-old steel-sharpening machines through the door he had broken into.

He just said "I'm scrapping," and refused to leave.

They say redheads have a temper, but this slightly-grayed one calmly said, "That's right, you won't leave," pulled out her snub-nosed .38-caliber handgun and shot the truck's tires out so he couldn't leave.

The thief was dumbfounded. He just stood there.

Ramey then flagged down a passing driver who called 911, and police soon arrested three people, including the one at the scene.

"They've been stealing from me for years, those good-for-nothing slobs," she told a reporter.

Did she think twice before shooting?

"I just went and did it. If they'd even dared come close to me, they'd be 6 feet under by now."

She's lived on her tobacco farm since the 1950s, when she married and started raising her two sons. But it's not the peaceful life city folk envision.

"I'm trying to live a quiet, peaceful life and stay out of trouble," she said. "And all it is, is one thing after another."

When asked what the thief did when she pulled out her gun, she said,

"He was probably wetting his pants."

If that's true, he's lucky that's all that was pouring out of his body.
